

Regina Blye is a dynamic “Advocrat” committed to high-impact systems change. She targets public policy reform aimed at improving the quality of life for people with disabilities; by removing barriers to education, employment, healthcare, transportation, and housing. Her advocacy led to President Barack Obama appointing Regina to serve on the United States Access Board for over six years. As a board member, she was responsible for the development of accessibility guidelines and standards for the American with Disabilities Act (ADA) and the Architectural Barriers Act (ABA). Regina moved from Austin, Texas, to Washington, DC almost three years ago to work at the US Health and Human Services/Administration for Community Living, and to visit as many museums as possible.

Regina gives back to the district by serving as an Ambassador for the Thelma D. Jones Brest Cancer Fund, a community member of the Southwest Neighborhood Assembly’s Emergency Preparedness Task Force, and a board member of the DC State Fair. She believes in staying active, so you can catch her playing Wheelchair Rugby, Boccia, and teaching Zumba in the area.
